Arrest made in death of missing Delaware teen

In custody. Delaware police arrested the boyfriend of Taylor Owens for allegedly killing the teen.

Delaware State Police yesterday made an arrest in connection with the death of missing Dover teen Taylor Owens, 19.

Investigators took into custody Owens' former boyfriend, 21-year-old Tony Mozick Jr., of Leipsic, after residents around 5:40 p.m. Saturday found charred human remains in a wooded area along the 200 block of Denny Street.

Officials with the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner positively identified the remains as those of Owens. After further investigation and interviews, detectives were allegedly able to connect Mozick to Owens' death.

Police believe Mozick killed Owens Aug. 31 during a physical domestic altercation in a residence the two shared on the 200 block of Denny Street. Mozick then allegedly moved the teen's body to the wooded area, where he tried to dispose of the remains by burning them.

Mozick Jr. in a Facebook post last May

Owens was at the center of an active missing person's investigation since Wednesday, when family members contacted authorities and told them they hadn't seen or heard from the teen since Aug. 31. Her remains were on Saturday turned over to the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner for an autopsy to determine the cause and manner of death.

Mozick was arrested yesterday morning and charged with first-degree murder and abuse of a corpse. He was jailed at the James T. Vaughn Correctional Center without bond.

Owens' and Mozick's Facebook pages portray the duo as a happy couple, having met while attending Dover High School. Owens worked as a nurse's assistant, while Mozick was a volunteer firefighter.

The social media sites also showed hints of Mozick's troubled background. In a post following a narcotics bust last July in which he was arrested, along with his father and two other men, for allegedly growing marijuana at Mozick Sr.'s residence, Mozick Jr. said he suffered from "severe paranoia" but did not take medication because he did not want to be a "pill addict" like his dad.

Mozick Jr. in a separate post seemed to hint at the fact that he'd committed violent crimes in the past, writing, "I'll just kill ya, I did it [before and] ain't scared to do it again."

Owens' last Facebook post came Aug. 31, the day of her alleged murder. "I work two jobs and still manage to go to school and achieve high honors, [the] least you can do is give me a little respect," she wrote. "I am so tired of everyone being so rude to me .. You['re] the one person I didn't expect it from."

Family history

Troubled past

The arrest came as Mozick Jr.'s family was still reeling from the murder of his father, who was stabbed to death Jan. 5 at his Leipsic home.

Delaware State Police soon arrested Mozick Sr.'s daughter Jennifer Barnes, 23, and Barnes' boyfriend Gerard Schweiger, 24, claiming Schweiger stabbed the 45-year-old to death during an argument.

Barnes and Schweiger then allegedly stuffed Mozick's body into a 55-gallon plastic tote container and on Jan. 6 threw it off a bridge on Fast Landing Road and into the Leipsic River.

There is no evidence the two crimes are related.

Gunfire. Two shot outside Manayunk's The Grape Room

Two men were shot early yesterday morning while leaving Manayunk performance venue and nightclub The Grape Room, according to police.

Officers responded around 1:20 a.m. to the 4300 block of Cresson Street — about three blocks away from The Grape Room — for a report of a double shooting.

Investigators said one man, 35, was shot three times in the chest and rushed to Roxborough Hospital, then transferred to Temple University Hospital, where he remained in critical condition yesterday.

A second man, 36, was shot once in the left arm and hand and taken to Temple in stable condition, according to authorities.

Police said the second victim told investigators the two men were, along with several friends, leaving The Grape Room at 105 Grape St. when they were shot by an unknown black male wearing a red sweatshirt.

The victim said he was unaware of a possible motive for the shooting.

Officials with the Northwest Detectives Division are continuing to investigate the crime.

Anyone with any information is asked to call 911, to contact the Northwest Detectives Division at 215-686-3053 or 3054, or to submit an anonymous tip by dialing 215-686-TIPS (8477) or by texting PPD TIP (773847).

School's in. Students should expect new faces on first day

Amid layoffs, budget cuts and school closings, students may have difficulty recognizing the classroom they exited only a few months ago.

"The scary thing is that from school to school, kids don't know what to expect," said Larissa Pahomov, English teacher at the Science Leadership Academy. "And to a certain degree, teachers don't know what to expect because maybe they know that certain counselors or school support staff or teachers haven't been restored yet. So they know who's missing but they don't necessarily know what that's going to look like because nobody's pressed play yet."

Pahomov, who spearheaded the website www.facesofthelayoffs.org which catalogued the some 3,000 school employees who lost their jobs, said yesterday that the more than 130,000 students will see new faces on the first day of school today.

Projections show schools will see one nurse for every 1,500 students, one assistant principal, if the school has more than 850 students, and almost no administrative support if the school has fewer students. There are no librarians and no full-time guidance counselors if the school has fewer than 600 students, meaning about 60 percent of schools will have no counselors.

Last year, the school district closed 24 schools total and as a result, between 7,000 and 8,000 students are relocating and class sizes are growing.

"In any sort of normal environment, that's the kind of situation where you'd want to be putting additional resources," she said, "And, instead, just like everywhere else, you have an absence of resources." TOMMY ROWAN

"So now you have students that really could use an extra helping hand, and they have no helping hand." Pahomov

Jabari the gorilla had tongue infection

Cause of death. Vets said Jabari probably hid his infection so as not to appear weak.

Jabari, the Philadelphia Zoo gorilla who was paired up with female Kira to produce offspring but died unexpectedly last month, had an acute severe bacterial infection on the back of his tongue, causing him to suffocate and die from swelling, zoo officials said this past weekend.

Zoo veterinarians said the 28-year-old western lowland gorilla's windpipe was blocked due to swelling. After receiving anesthesia, Jabari fell asleep and the blocked airway prevented oxygen from reaching his lungs.

When vets realized Jabari wasn't breathing, they performed an emergency tracheotomy. But he couldn't be resuscitated.

The pathologist who performed Jabari's necropsy discovered a small wound underneath his tongue and said it could have been a piece of plant or twig that nicked him.

"Bacteria normally found in the mouth could have entered the tissues under the tongue through this wound and spread over a 2-3 day period," said Keith Hinshaw, the zoo's senior veterinarian. "A human with this type of infection would go immediately to a hospital for treatment because of the discomfort, but a wild animal such as a gorilla will often try to hide their symptoms in order not to appear weak to other animals, and by the time they show signs of illness the infection can be life-threatening."

Homicide

Body found in speakeasy

Police are investigating the discovery yesterday of a man's body inside the entrance to a North Philadelphia speakeasy.

Investigators said a 33-year-old Hispanic man was shortly after 2 p.m. found lying in the entryway on the 3300 block of North Fifth Street. The man suffered wounds to the chest and back and died on the scene.

Police were unsure yesterday whether the victim had been stabbed or shot. No weapon was recovered, and no arrests had been made.

Members of Congress question White House approach on Syria

Both parties. Surveys of Congress show there are still large blocks of undecided lawmakers.

The White House pressed its case yesterday for military action in Syria but faced an uphill fight in Congress, where several prominent lawmakers said they have not been persuaded to approve strikes against Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's forces.

With a crucial test vote planned in the U.S. Senate on Wednesday, White House Chief of Staff Denis McDonough made the rounds of five Sunday talk shows to argue that a limited strike in response to Syrian government's alleged use of chemical weapons would send a message of deterrence to regional foes.

But Mike Rogers, Republican chairman of the House Intelligence Committee and a supporter of the strikes, said President Barack Obama had made "a hash" of his argument for military action to punish Assad.

Obama's plan faces significant resistance from Republicans and his fellow Democrats in Congress, with many lawmakers worried military strikes in Syria could lead to a prolonged U.S. commitment there and spark broader conflicts in the region. REUTERS

US undecided on seeking new Syria UN vote

The United States said yesterday it did not rule out returning to the U.N. Security Council to secure a Syria resolution once U.N. inspectors complete a report on a chemical weapons attack, but indicated Arab countries were seeking a tough response.

Washington and Paris say forces loyal to President Bashar al-Assad were behind the attack. REUTERS

Syrian leader Assad says no evidence of chemical attack: CBS

An Israeli soldier stands near an "Iron Dome" battery, a short-range missile defense system, designed to intercept and destroy incoming short-range rockets and artillery shells. / GETTY IMAGES

Killings. The Obama administration has accused Assad's forces of carrying out the attack.

Syrian President Bashar al-Assad denied that he was behind a chemical weapons attack on the Syrian people and said evidence was not conclusive that there had been such an attack, CBS reported on Sunday on its news program "Face the Nation."

"There has been no evidence that I used chemical weapons against my own people," CBS reported Assad said in an interview conducted in Damascus.

The full interview will air on the CBS network and PBS's "Charlie Rose" show today. Rose said he met with Assad in Damascus. The CBS "Face the Nation" report was a summary of the interview and did not contain any audio or video of Assad.

Assad spoke as the Obama administration was pressing its case in the United States for congressional authorization of a U.S. strike against Syria in response to the Aug. 21 sarin gas attack that Washington said killed more than 1,400 Syrians.

Passage by Congress of the authorization for use of force is by no means certain. Votes are expected this week. REUTERS

Deployed defense

Turkey adds troops, weapons on border

Turkey has bolstered its defenses and deployed additional troops on its southeastern Syrian border in recent days as the United States tries to build international support for a military strike on Syria.

The reason for the additional security measures were not clear but Prime Minister Tayyip Erdogan has repeatedly said Turkey was ready to take part in any international coalition against Syria.

Israeli official

US would notify Israel hours before Syria attack

The United States would notify Israel hours in advance of an attack on Syria, an Israeli official said yesterday.

While formally on the sidelines of the Syrian crisis, Israel fears coming under reprisals from its northern foe should the United States launch strikes to punish Damascus for alleged use of chemical weaponry.

Asked how much advance notice Israel would get from its U.S. ally about such attacks, an Israeli official briefed on contacts with Washington told Reuters: "Hours."

But a senior strategist for the Defense Ministry said separately Israel was, like the rest of the world, in the dark at present.

Oil leak

US spied on Brazil's Petrobras oil firm: Globo TV

The U.S. government allegedly spied on Brazilian state-run oil company Petroleo Brasileiro SA, known as Petrobras, according to the website of Globo, Brazil's biggest television network.

The network, which a week ago aired a report alleging that the U.S. National Security Agency intercepted communications by the presidents of Brazil and Mexico, said its information again came from Glenn Greenwald, an American activist who has worked with fugitive former NSA analyst Edward Snowden to expose the extent of U.S. spying at home and abroad.

Greenwald, a blogger and civil liberties activist who lives in Rio de Janeiro, declined to discuss the Petrobras allegations until after the program aired last night. Petrobras officials could not be reached for comment. REUTERS

Smartphones try fashion makeovers to stand out from pack

Motorola's Moto X comes in wooden versions. / GETTY IMAGES

Creative. Making more stylish phones, however, can increase production costs.

Bright colors, funky textures and personalization are coming to a smartphone near you as mobile phone makers turn to fashion to buoy sales in a crowded market.

Apple Inc. and Google Inc.'s Motorola are among those trying to score style points as game-changing technological innovation becomes harder to achieve in the maturing business.

Since the first touchscreen iPhone hit the market in 2007, software features have become easier to replicate and improvements in speed, weight, display size and resolution have become routine. The explosion of me-too products is already hurting profit margins and nibbling at Apple and Samsung Electronic Co. Ltd.'s market share.

Apple has invited reporters to an event tomorrow where it is expected to introduce new iPhones in a much broader palette of colors, perhaps even gold.

One-time leader Motorola, now owned by Google, is trying to win back consumers with the Moto X, relying partly on customized colors and, soon to come, engravings and unusual casing materials such as wood. REUTERS

To help with logistics, Motorola is using a Flextronics International Ltd. contract facility near Dallas that can custom-build phones and ship within six days. Its long-term target is four days.

1 Who gave this kid a Kar (dashian)?

I was going to write something about how sick I am of the Kardashians' absurdly public exploits, but then I remembered that if those bozos stopped fighting publicly, having huge butts, marrying athletes and rappers, etc., I'd have a much harder time finding things to write about for this column.

And since I'm writing this particular column on a Sunday, with last night's cocktails still sloshing around in my bloodstream, I was pleased that Kendall Jenner (one of the two teenage sisters, who I can't tell apart, but I can tell are right on track to grow up to be just as vapid and useless as their big sisters) did not disappoint this weekend.

Kendall was apparently taking video selfies of herself while driving on Friday. How do we know this? The little brainiac posted these videos of herself to the Internet. They show Kendall making duck faces that she definitely thinks are adorable and sexy eyes that definitely were not focused anywhere near the road — which is the place that eyes, sexy or otherwise, should be focused when one is operating a motor vehicle.

This is such a predictably dumb and self-obsessed Kardashian thing to do that it almost seems orchestrated by whatever media overlord pulls their puppet strings (looking at you, Seacrest!). This, mind you, is right on the heels of Kylie (the other teenager) crashing her $110,000 Mercedes last week.

Please take a nice long minute to consider the fact that a 16-year-old girl had a $110,000 car and you're probably reading this with your face in some guy's sweaty armpit on a subway on your way to a job that doesn't involve being famous for a living. Happy Monday.

[Editor's note: Apparently we do not keep up with the Kardashians quite as well as we think we do. In Friday's Word, we mistakenly wrote that Lamar Odom is married to Kourtney. He is married to Khloe. Though maybe not for long.]

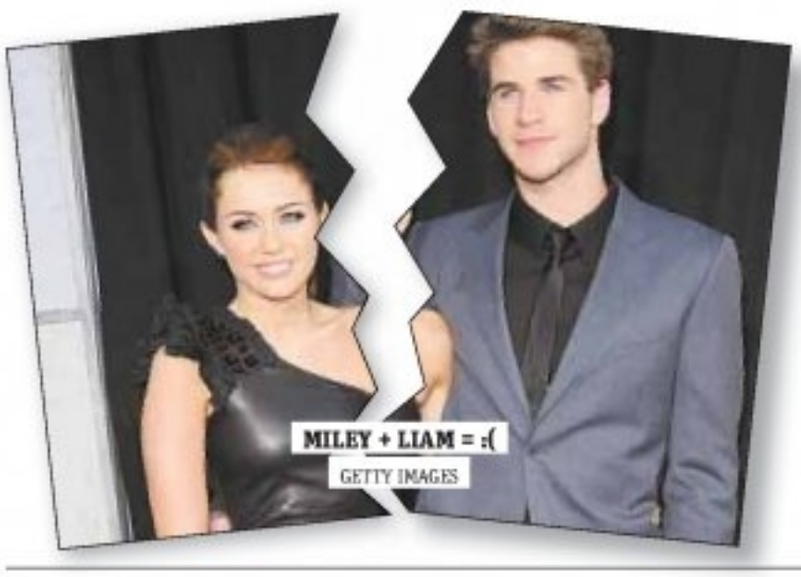
EYES ON THE ROAD, KENDALL JENNER! / GETTY IMAGES

2 Cyrus back on the market?

If the Kardashians aren't giving me easy "news" fodder, it's Miley Cyrus. I love Miley.

Unfortunately, I guess Liam Hemsworth does not love Miley. According to Us Weekly, he's over their engagement and does not want to make it twerk. LOL, see what I did there? Twerking is so hot right now, you guys. And so is that new club drug Molly, which — heads up, parents — is not new, but will help you twerk better and also maybe kill you.

Anyway, my point here (I had one, I swear) is that Miley and Liam will not be getting married after all. Also, Miley called a paparazzo a C-word over the weekend, and then announced it over Twitter. Miley doesn't care.



MILEY + LIAM = :(GETTY IMAGES

THERE IS NO MCDONALD'S IN GWYNETH PALTROW'S HOUSEHOLD. / GETTY IMAGES

3 Goop's kids ate fries

I think that Chris Martin probably took his kids to McDonald's just to stick it to Gwyneth Paltrow. Because can you imagine a more horrifying scenario for Goop than the idea of Gwynnie's kale-fed angels eating fast food? In a plastic booth? In the vicinity of poor people and their poor children?

According to the National Enquirer, Paltrow and family were in the Hamptons for a signing of her new book, "I Know Best and You're All Ugly," (just kidding, it's a cookbook titled "It's All Good" — that first title is the name of my future memoir) and, while Gwynnie was busy with her legions of adoring fans, Martin took the kids to lunch at Mickey D's. And apparently she freaked out. Elegantly, though. Like, a super-refined freak-out.

4 Burning Man goes mainstream

Well guys, I think Burning Man might have jumped the shark. (Can big, smelly desert festivals fueled by lots and lots of drugs and artistic pretensions jump sharks?) I think this because Puff Daddy (I will never, ever call Sean Combs anything but Puff Daddy, that's final) was there this weekend.

According to the Huffington Post, pictures of the mogul/producer/terrible rapper wearing a golden glove a la Michael Jackson, some sort of sailor suit and, inexplicably, holding a pink parasol (see: drugs) at Burning Man have emerged on the Internet — which, while awesome in so many ways, does not really embody the spirit of Burning Man. I don't think. Actually, I don't really understand what Burning Man is about, other than getting weird, which I guess he accomplished.

Mostly, I just wanted to put a picture of Puff Daddy in a sailor suit holding a pink umbrella in front of a burning pile of sticks while the sweet and low strains of "I'll Be Missing You" play in the background in all your heads.

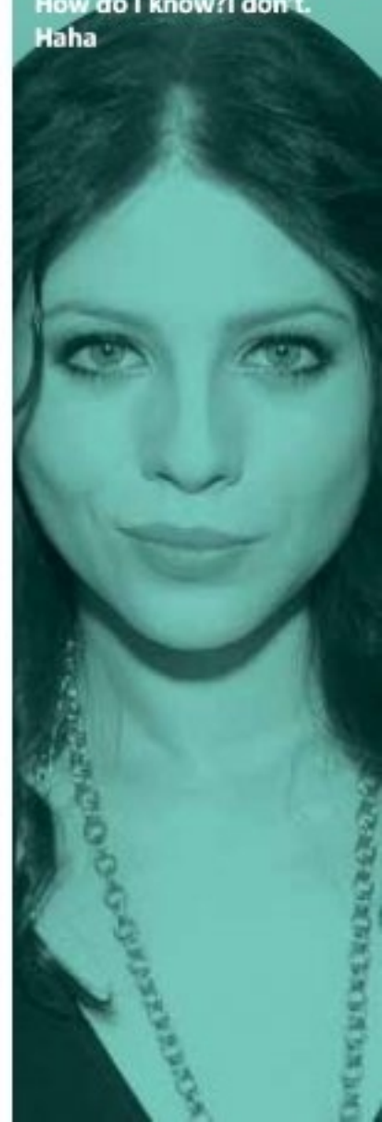
James Franco is a Lady Gaga fan, Tom Arnold is a fan of Canada, Michelle Trachtenberg is a fan of being folksy and Jim Carrey is a fan of having it all figured out.

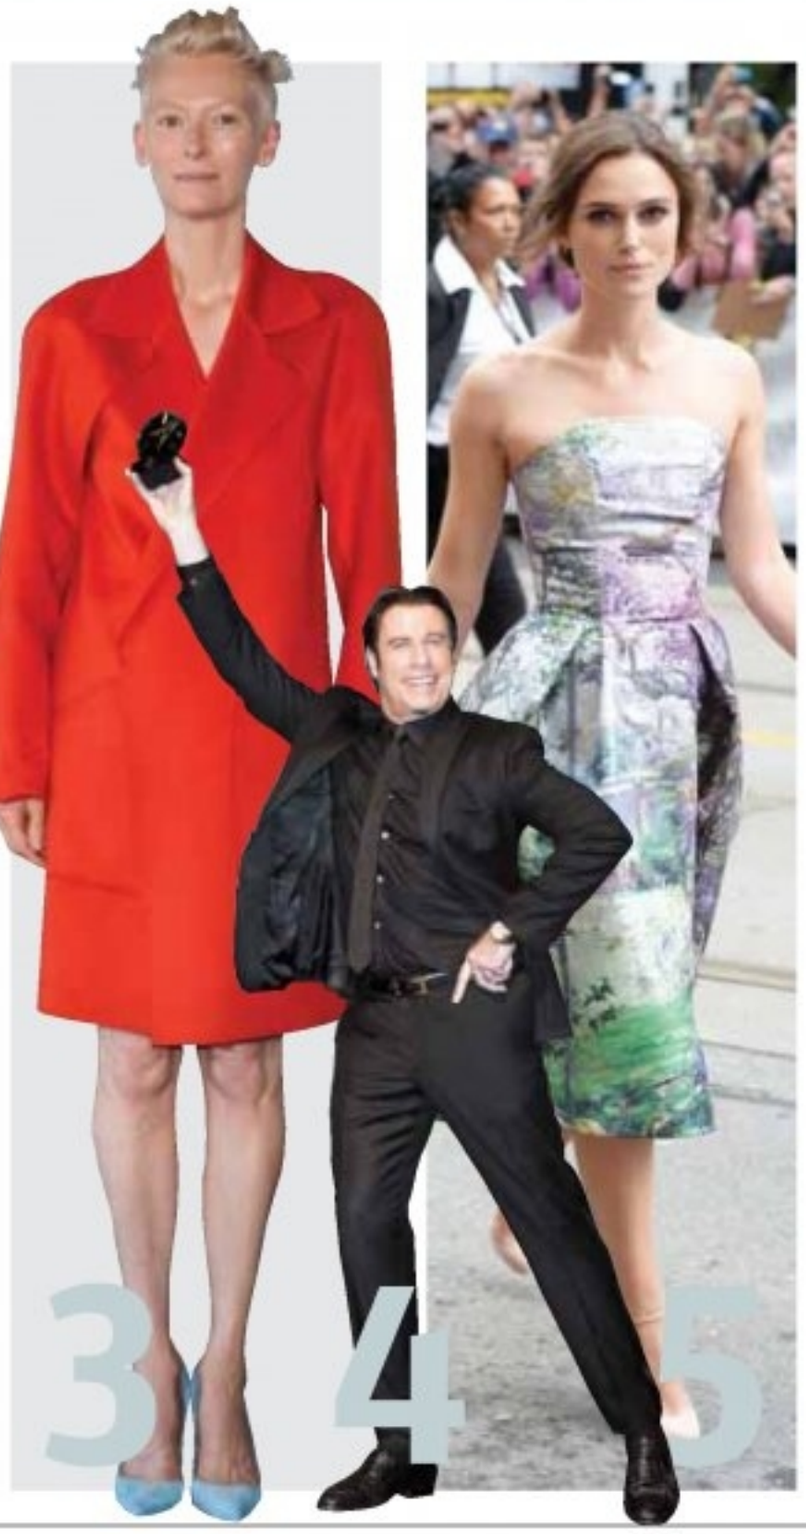
@JamesFrancoTV: Gaga at fashion week - so sweet

@TomArnold: I don't want to hurt LA's feelings but I could totally see myself falling in love with this town #Toronto

@RealMichelleT: Am I the only person who uses 'Anyhoo' as an amusing transitional word in a conversation?

@JimCarrey: We r seedlings being formed by our choices on greenhouse earth 2 be replanted,when mature,in the astral plane. How do I know?I don't. Haha





Celebrities. What the stars not at Fashion Week are doing

1 Across the pond, Selena Gomez performed onstage at Hammersmith Apollo on Saturday in London.

3 Tilda Swinton was at the 39th Deauville American Film Festival in Deauville, France, on Friday, promoting the film "Snowpiercer."

4 John Travolta revived a classic move while receiving a tribute before the screening of "Killing Season" during the Deauville American Film Festival on Friday.

6 Nicole Kidman spent her Friday at Roy Thompson Hall for the premiere of "The Railway Man" at the Toronto International Film Festival.

RALPH FIENNES

The actor brings his Dickens drama "The Invisible Woman" to the Toronto International Film Festival.

THE VISIBLE MAN

GETTY IMAGES

Ralph Fiennes returns to TIFF with his second directorial effort, "The Invisible Woman," about a young actress who is the object of Charles Dickens' affections. Fiennes also co-stars as Dickens alongside Felicity Jones as the titular woman. Fiennes admits he's becoming something of an expert on the author.

You play Charles Dickens in this, but it's not really about Dickens.
It's based on a book called "The Invisible Woman," a biography about Ellen Ternan, the young actress that Dickens fell in love with. I was ignorant of this book but I was sent an early draft of the screenplay based on it by Abi Morgan, who wrote "Shame." I read the book, which is a fantastic exploration of actresses in Victorian society. Dickens was a key figure, but it's really the story of Ellen Ternan and her family.

It's a look at Ellen Ternan and what it is to have had in your past this intimacy with a great, famous man — but a man, and a man in a particular position in society. The rules of the relationship and engagement with the opposite sex all came back to marriage, so anything outside of that was unacceptable. So how you negotiate that — affairs of the heart and desire — is what it's about.

What sticks out about Dickens from your research?
I think Dickens was fascinated by social ambition. It features in quite a few of his books, this need to get on, to have money, to be a gentleman. England is still saddled with underlying, stupid class things, but back then I think those divisions were very, very embedded in a way that's hard for us to comprehend — that to achieve social advancement was an extremely real and important thing.

There wasn't that sort of counter-thinking, whereas now everyone's bending over backwards not to be seen to be wanting to [do better]. They do all kinds of odd reverse actions if they're ambitious to pretend they're not, if they're successful to pretend they're not. But I think in that time it was about, "I am a man of substance or a woman of substance," and there was no shame in that. Dickens himself worked his way up through his writing, but I get the sense that Dickens was very aware of where he'd come from.

More of the same

You were in Toronto last year for your acting work in "Great Expectations," which you followed with "The Invisible Woman." That's a lot of Dickens.
That's true, I was working on "Great Expectations" when I was also working on "The Invisible Woman." I had this sort of two-year immersion in Dickens. Up until that point I was pretty ignorant about Dickens, but now I'm a fan. I just think the humor in his observations is brilliant.

Diesel rules — technically

Box office.
"Riddick" triumphs during a historically light weekend at the movie theater.

Vin Diesel saunters to the top of a weak box office weekend with "Riddick." / UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Vin Diesel's return as glowing-eyed space traveler Richard B. Riddick won the weekend movie race, ringing up $18.7 million in U.S. and Canadian ticket sales and knocking three-time box office queen Oprah Winfrey to second place.

The movie was the only new nationwide release on the post-Labor Day weekend, usually one of year's slowest at theaters as summer blockbuster season ends and kids return to school.

"Riddick" is a sequel to the 2000 release "Pitch Black" and 2004's "The Chronicles of Riddick." It was independently financed for $38 million.

Civil rights drama "Lee Daniels' The Butler," starring Oscar winner Forest Whitaker and media mogul Winfrey, slipped to second, bringing in $8.9 million from Friday through Sunday.

"The Butler" brought its cumulative sales to $91.9 million. The movie topped box office rankings in its first two weekends and again over the four-day Labor Day period.

"Instructions Not Included," a Spanish-language film starring and directed by Mexican television star Eugenio Derbez, was third with $8.1 million in its second week in release in U.S. and Canadian theaters.

Jennifer Aniston comedy "We're the Millers" took in $7.9 million for fourth place, followed by animated Disney film "Planes" with $4.3 million.

Concert film "One Direction: This is Us," about the popular British boy band, fell to the No. 6 slot with $4.1 million, according to studio estimates.

Lighter and brighter, Fashion Week arrives

Jason Wu

I'm only two blocks away from Jason Wu's show, but traffic is moving at a snail's pace thanks to a stream of burly, black SUVs carrying editors to the venue and a gang of bloggers spilling out into traffic to shoot one of the street-style peacocks. Inside, bona fide celebrities like Alicia Keys and Maria Sharapova stoke a different set of paparazzi. The clothes that come down the runway shortly afterward seem designed to move easily into the closets of women of a certain kind of wealth and taste level: celebrities who want to look fashionable without taking too many risks, jet-setters looking to update their wardrobes for expensive, warm-weather trips. These easy, bias-cut dresses and loungy separates feel more grown-up and wearable than the more youthful, vampy edge Wu gave us last season. The clothes are pretty, and beautifully made. But it's all a little too polished, and, frankly, slightly benign — I honestly struggle to remember what I've just looked at. And that's never happened at a Jason Wu show before.

Rag & Bone

The audience at the Rag & Bone show makes me wonder if I've been transported back to 1994. I'm sensing a strong '90s moment on the runway too. But it's less Courtney Love, more Obsession-era Kate Moss — and sexier, which is a new direction for David Neville and Marcus Wainwright, who have built their brand on a foundation of mannish tailoring. Not surprisingly, their minimalist slips work best when styled with tomboyish pieces such as a simple, pale moto jacket or a monochromatic, deep v-neck sweater. (These are the guys who perfected that perennially popular formula of mixing boyfriend staples with girly-girl elements.) Actually, the most memorable pieces here are the simplest: a sexy white halter top worn under a pair of polished, streamlined overalls, and an A-line leather wrap skirt styled with a crisp white short-sleeve polo shirt.

The show still hasn't started, but no one seems to mind, thanks to attendees Kerry Washington, Tyson Chandler, Kendrick Lamar and Courtney Love, who keep most of us busy people-watching. Kanye West strolls in a few minutes later and the venue's stagehands remove the plastic from the runway so that the show can begin. The studied elegance and Balenciaga references from last season are gone, and frankly, I miss them. Instead, they've been replaced by some great spring coats and the tiniest pleated skirts and shorts. The problems begin with the Alexander Wang logos, which are everywhere to the point of distraction. It's as if he pulled a page from the book of Karl Lagerfeld and dialed it to #TURNUP. But I'm sure the branded pieces will surface in street-style photo galleries on the bony shoulders of his loyal models off-duty. KENYA HUNT

Kim Schneiderman's book "Step Out of Your Story: Writing Exercises to Reframe and Transform Your Life," is due to be published in the spring.

YOUR THERAPIST CAN'T GIVE YOU ALL THE ANSWERS

I've been seeing a therapist for a year. While I know that I'm supposed to figure out the answers to some of my problems, I get frustrated sometimes because I'm unsure if I can find some of the answers myself. Isn't that why people go to therapy in the first place? I feel like I leave with the same problems.

When I read your question, I couldn't help but laugh to myself. Not because it's a silly question — it's actually a rather common question — but because, as a psychotherapist who's been on both sides of the couch, I can relate.

As you may or may not know, many therapists see therapists themselves. In fact, we're encouraged to do so because it helps prevent our own baggage from getting mixed in with yours (yes, therapists are people too, and occasionally we have issues of our own). Anyway, sometimes I really, really want my therapist to tell me what to do, especially if I'm confused, and the thing that I'm confused about could have big consequences. I would much prefer to be absolved from the responsibility of having to make a tough choice that screws up my life or, at least, that I fear will screw up my life, which isn't the same thing.

Your therapist is there to help you see yourself more clearly — not necessarily to dole out advice. / WAVEBREAK MEDIA

When I'm in these foggy places, I often turn to my therapist and say, "Why can't you just tell me what to do?" She just smiles. She knows I know why. She doesn't have "the answer." And even if she did, I wouldn't have believed her. I had to learn it for myself.

A therapist's job is not necessarily to offer advice, even though some of us occasionally do, with careful considerations and caveats, under certain circumstances — for instance, an advice column. Our job is to reflect back what we see, hear and feel; to use our understanding of the human psyche to ask thoughtful questions that help you see yourself more clearly; and to be a compassionate witness to your dance with the human condition. We don't have working crystal balls, and even if we did point you in a particular direction, that would just be our opinion. If we were wrong, you'd blame us. If we were right, you would never feel completely able to own the strength and self-assurance that comes with making a tough choice. Just the other day, I resisted my temptation to offer my opinion about a decision a client had to make and helped her find it for herself, which was far more powerful.

That being said, here's my advice (ha, ha). If you're feeling like you're spinning your wheels, share this with your therapist. Perhaps the two of you can explore what is getting in the way of being able to hear the soft inner voice that whispers your truth. Some Gestalt techniques (ask your therapist) can be especially helpful for making decisions. Meditation and a lesser-known process known as Focusing, which helps tune into thoughts and feelings based on bodily sensations, are also great ways to gain clarity (for more information, go to www.focusing.org).

My final word of advice is to be patient with yourself. Therapy is not an exact science, and untangling the webs of thoughts and feelings we experience from day to day, especially in wounded places, takes time. I hope you and your therapist can figure out what knots and loose strands are getting in the way. And when all else fails, sit quietly and really listen to yourself.

Sell your would-be bosses on your education

Landing that job. Your degree isn't unique, but your educational experience is.

Most employers have met hundreds or thousands of people in your field, many of whom possess the same credentials as you do. To make an impact, you need to demonstrate how your education is compatible with the role you're interested in. This reflects your familiarity with the position itself, as well as your position as a qualified candidate.

You might not have any work experience under your belt, but your educational history is an often-forgotten and incredibly important selling point at your disposal. Just about any post-secondary program will have helped you develop marketable skills that you might not even recognize. Your next task is to communicate that.

Check out these tips to help you sell your education to employers.

Spotlight your education on your résumé

On the first page of your résumé, make sure you have space to list your educational background.

To highlight the unique character of your education, include a brief description of what you learned throughout your program, as well as any extra classes you may have taken that complement the role you're applying for.

List both the hard and soft skills you've learned, or are learning, throughout your program. Be prepared to explain them in further detail.

Major good idea

Influence of a minor

This is a great time to make your minor work for you too. A major and minor combination can make for a versatile background, so be sure to note how those two subjects can (and will) work together.

Make your online presence correspond

Getting your online profile to correspond with your résumé is key when it comes to making yourself research-friendly.

If an employer can't find you online, that doesn't send a good message — particularly if you're applying to a job that involves social media responsibilities.

Too many job-seekers only have the program they graduated from on their professional profile. This doesn't provide enough detail. Listing the courses you took in addition to listing your program helps employers explore your skills, which in turn gives them a clearer understanding of why you'll be a great addition to their team.

Not just for party pics

Facebook can help

A savvy job-seeker uses each major social media outlet as part of a whole strategy of self-presentation. Make sure your Twitter and Facebook reflect some of the skills and passions you're trying to communicate to an employer.

Present with confidence

Potential employers will often ask you about your reasons for following a particular educational pathway. If you interpret this question as a criticism, you'll get nervous and freeze up.

Figure out what your motivations were and communicate with confidence. Understanding why you're qualified for a job and displaying confidence in your education can often be the deciding factor on the job hunt. MEGHAN GREAVES

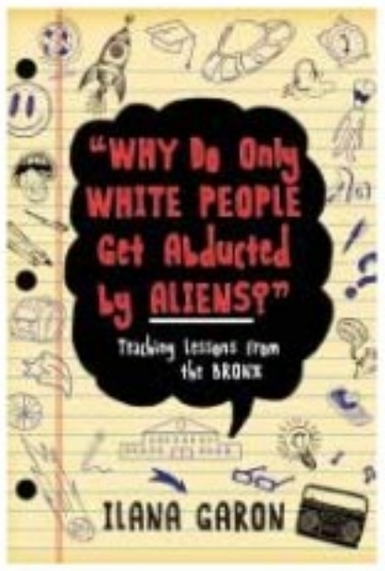
The Bronx: Students more than statistics



Memoir. Teacher Ilana Garon provides insight into the lives of students.

Ilana Garon lives on the Upper West Side and hops on the 2 train for her daily 40-minute ride to the Bronx, where she teaches at the Christopher Columbus Campus, a large school building that has been transformed into six smaller schools. She has been doing this for 10 years, and her experience has informed her first book, "Why Do Only White People Get Abducted by Aliens?"

"I wanted to give an insider look of what it is day-to-day to be a student and to be a young teacher in a school like the one that I'm working in," she says. "Too many times we see kids from the Bronx only represented as statistics. I was interested in the story of their lives."

Readers meet bright kids caught up in gangs, pregnant teenage girls and learning-disabled students whose fighting spirits come to life with Garon's humorous perspective.

As she arrives at what her students refer to as "the prison," Garon points out places where many of the scenes from her book occurred.

"Look, that's the window one of my students escaped out of after having a fight," she says. "And that's the entrance where they have to pass through a metal detector every day."

Garon doesn't argue that the metal detectors should be any different; she just notes that it's the reality.

"One of the biggest problems at inner-city schools is poverty," she says. "Kids come without food, eyeglasses [or] books. ... These are students who are struggling in a variety of different situations and the fact that they are able to accomplish the things that they are is amazing, considering the difficulties they come from."

Another issue Garon deals with is how teachers are perceived.

"Everybody has seen a bad teacher and everybody has seen a good teacher, which means that everybody thinks that they are totally entitled to critique education," she says. "Nobody would ever do that with an investment banker."

Five problems Garon would like addressed

1. Students' low level of engagement due to post-graduation options other than college
2. Low student skill levels resulting from learning differences, language barriers and interrupted former education
3. Slashed school budgets
4. Insufficient teacher training, recruitment and incentives to stay in school
5. Insufficient interventions to help struggling students graduate and learn skills

Students prefer tablets to textbooks

Report. Numbers show that tablet owners want more options for education.

With back-to-school season here, kids aren't the only ones leaving the house this fall: Money is also flowing from parents' wallets for pricey textbooks.

A new report from Nielsen found that 71 percent of students who use tablets are interested in accessing textbooks on them. Google is one example of a company listening to this emerging demand. Students can now rent or buy digital textbooks via Google Play.

Among tablet owners over age 13 who use their device at school, Nielsen said 51 percent use it for searching the Internet. Tablet owners at school are also using email (46 percent), reading books (42 percent), taking notes (40 percent) and completing homework assignments (30 percent).

For kids under 11, 78 percent of tablet-owning parents report letting these younger children play with tablets at home. Many of these parents (54 percent) say their kids are using the tablets "for educational purposes."

But even some parents are expressing demand for more educational content. One in five parents who don't allow their children to play with tablets said they would "if there was more educational content on them."

The data referenced is from Nielsen's quarterly Connected Devices Report, for the first quarter of 2013.

Job relocation tips from the experts

Exit strategy.
Looking for a new job in a new city? Here's what to know.

Pack it up, you're moving for your job. / PHOTODOBJECTS.NET

Whether you're striving for a bigger paycheck or just need a change of pace, there are many reasons why people choose to relocate for their careers. But landing a job in a new city is tough, regardless if you have a Rolodex of contacts. Three career experts dish on how to stand out to employers (even with an out-of-state address on your résumé).

While employers may initially be hesitant to hire someone not-local, there are benefits to broadening the applicant pool. "The advantage is bringing someone with fresh ideas and new contacts," says Nicole Williams, career expert for LinkedIn. "It can completely change their business by gaining support from another region."

MARY WHEELER
letters@metro.us

Worth importing

Three common mistakes

1 Not highlighting why a company should make an exception: "Your job application needs to demonstrate that you are more than just the average employee, says Maggie Mistal, a career consultant, radio host and speaker.

2 Not explaining upfront why you are considering moving: "Employers are curious as to why someone would be motivated to make such a major life change," says Alexandra Levit, author of the business book "Blind Spots" and career blogger for The Fast Track.

3 Lying on your résumé about your current address: "The employer will eventually find out you lied, which will no doubt cost you the job," says Williams.

Ch-ch-ch-changes

What to say in the interview

Besides doing your interview homework, Mistal recommends highlighting something you're excited to experience or love about the new location. Also, don't focus on moving logistics until after you get an offer. "Steer the conversation toward the fact that you're up for a change," says Williams.

How to stand out

"I'll be in the area"

For a job you really want, let the hiring manager know that you'll "be in the area," and would like to meet. Book a flight and meet them in person (yes, this means spending money). "Video conferencing and phone interviews can connect people, but nothing replaces a handshake and sit-down," says Williams.

Horoscope

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Revisit old plans and people you have done business with in the past. Discussions will lead to agreements.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. Say little and do a lot when it comes to your work or career. You can achieve recognition if you are hard-working. Don't let personal matters interfere.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. Your innovative ways will help others, but you must be careful not to let anyone take advantage of you.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan 20. A partnership will bring new life to an old game. You're in a cycle where nothing can slow you down, so get moving!

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb 18. Bypass anyone trying to stifle your plans or your emotions. An inventive approach will add to your appeal in the workplace or at home.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. It's a good day for drawing up contracts. If you forge new partnerships, you'll find much success.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20. Jump into a challenging situation and show everyone that you have the skills to handle the impossible.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21. You may want to make changes at home, but be careful. Disagreements or carelessness can lead to hurt feelings. Seek advice from all the concerned parties before taking the plunge.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22. Check out destinations packed with historic information involving your background.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. Concentrate on changes that will make you feel good about who you are and how you look. Don't let anyone discourage you.

US shouldn't be the UN

I'm tired of watching the rest of the world sit back while the U.S. sacrifices its lives and economy to uphold the standards of humanity. The reason the rest of the world does nothing is because they know we will. The U.S. is not the world's peace-keeping organization — that's what the U.N. was supposed to be. If we continue to be the only country that steps up in times of atrocity, there is no reason for any other country to participate. It's time it put an end to this no-win cycle.

Other cultures aren't awful

Re: 'Metro's gone subversive' (Metro, Sept. 6-8) How sad that people are still so racist. The greatest thing about our city, our country, is its diversity. It's a pretty sick leap for someone to suggest that Metro is a "communist rag" for sporting a Spanish cover. I pray for the ignorant people in our world that think the way this reader does — fortunately, most of us do not share this ugly, racist opinion!

CHRISTINA LAFORGIA, VIA EMAIL

The universal language

So I pick up a Metro the other day and notice that the front page is in Spanish. Perhaps they delivered the wrong edition? I look inside and see that everything else is in English, and there's a BIG BOLD HEADLINE on page 3 with a story explaining what's up with the Spanish-language front page. Oh, I get it: They're making a point about photography as a universal language, that's all!

Scheming with speed

NFL. The Eagles will debut their new offensive pace tonight in D.C.

The Eagles will open the 2013 season tonight in Washington (6:55 p.m., ESPN). No one is quite sure what to expect — other than the team will be fast. Everything new coach Chip Kelly does is fast. He talks fast (think of those old commercials for Micro Machines) and his offense runs on hyper-speed (Kelly's Oregon teams averaged around 80 snaps per game).

In the preseason, Kelly teased with several up-tempo looks, lots of no-huddle and bunch packages. Now the real test begins. The regular season brings a whole new set of challenges and the NFL better adjust. Mike Vick is the quarterback. The offensive line is healthy. The sky's the limit for the most innovative coach to embrace a locker room in ages.

"If there's one guy who might change the league in the most dramatic way, it's Chip Kelly in Philadelphia," said NFL analyst Cris Collinsworth. "It is an entertaining team to watch. They press the envelope. They're taking the read-option and they're doing things far beyond what we're seeing anybody else do with it."

Fast & furious

Chip Kelly's Oregon teams ran an offensive play every 20.5 seconds and the Eagles will likely look to have the quickest pace this year in the NFL.

Kelly's principles have already been adopted around the league, namely by his good friend Bill Belichick in New England. The Pats ran a play every 25 seconds in 2012, a number unheard of in NFL circles. Kelly's Oregon teams averaged 20.5 seconds per play. Even in the early days of training camp, Kelly was talking about the speed of his offense.

"Sometimes when we are calling things that are not scripted it's a little bit slower because we got to know what down and distance is when the play call comes in," Kelly said. "You know that is kind of what happens in a game. When we have things scripted we are just ripping them off as fast as we can from the script. From how many reps we are getting in at practice, they are really similar since we started."

No one knows what to expect really with the new Eagles' offense. One thing is certain, it's going to be fast.

Jets stun Bucs

For once the Jets were the ones celebrating after a mindless personal foul penalty. Tampa Bay's Lavonte David gave Jets rookie QB Geno Smith an extra shove on his way out of bounds with time running out. The play resulted in a 15-yard penalty, gave New York the ball at the Tampa 30 and set up a Nick Folk field goal. Folk's kick was good and the Jets won, 18-17.

LeSean McCoy and the Eagles are back in the Meadowlands on Oct. 6. / GETTY IMAGES

Plenty of drama on the 2013 slate

NFL. The Birds' schedule is stacked with intriguing matchups.

Eagles at Redskins, Sept. 9, 6:55 p.m.
Welcome to the Chip Kelly era, Eagles fans. Most prognosticators are predicting a lopsided Redskins win in this one. ESPN gave the Birds a goose egg. That seems a bit exaggerated even for the most seasoned hater. Still, Washington is extremely proficient at running the ball — and the Eagles are extremely deficient at stopping the run.
Prediction: Redskins 42, Eagles 28

Chiefs at Eagles, Sept. 19, 8:25 p.m.
Can we coin this the Andy Reid Bowl? Well, we just did. Reid will lead his new team against his old one, all while Donovan McNabb is being honored and having his number retired. The sentimental thought is the Eagles draw on that nostalgia and pull out the W. However, the Chiefs can match the Eagles' speed on offense and boat one of the most active defenses in the entire NFL.
Prediction: Chiefs 20, Eagles 17

Eagles at Broncos, Sept. 29, 4:25 p.m.
It's only one game. But judging by what Peyton Manning did to Baltimore's secondary last Thursday night, this could get ugly really, really fast. The Eagles are lining up with a bunch of unknowns in Bradley Fletcher, Cary Williams and Brandon Boykin. Manning will look to exploit them early and often. He might throw for nine touchdowns.
Prediction: Broncos 54, Eagles 35

Eagles at Giants, Oct. 6, 1 p.m.
Call it a hunch, but we like the Birds. They could be coming off a devastating loss out in Denver — while the Giants are coming off a big win in Kansas City — and Kelly never incurred back-to-back losses during his tenure at Oregon. The new coach certainly isn't going to lose three straight. Too much pride.
Prediction: Eagles 30, Giants 20

Cowboys at Eagles, Oct. 20, 1 p.m.
This has all the makings of a shootout — then again, that could apply to any game in 2013. Dez Bryant, Miles Austin, Jason Witten are all solid fantasy plays here, but the Eagles take advantage of a vulnerable Dallas rush defense.
Prediction: Eagles 27, Cowboys 24

Eagles at Packers, Nov. 10, 1 p.m.
It's a small sample set (two games) but Aaron Rodgers has never lost to the Eagles. Rest assured, Rodgers will be dissecting tape from the Broncos-Eagles game, specifically looking at the way Manning attacked the secondary.
Prediction: Packers 35, Eagles 23

Eagles at Vikings, Dec. 15, 1 p.m.
The optimist assumes the Eagles' defense will have found its identity by this point. Earl Wolff will have supplanted Nate Allen at safety. DeMeco Ryans will have readjusted to the 3-4. Boykin will have earned a starting spot. Truth is, the only thing anyone knows is that Adrian Peterson can't be stopped.
Prediction: Vikings 17, Eagles 14

Bears at Eagles, Dec. 22, 1 p.m.
This is the time of year Jay Cutler either gets sidelined due to injury or throws a tantrum, so the Bears will likely be out of the playoff race and distracted. DeSean Jackson keeps the faith alive with a thrilling, 75-yard punt return to win it.
Prediction: Eagles 29, Bears 24

Five guys who need to thrive

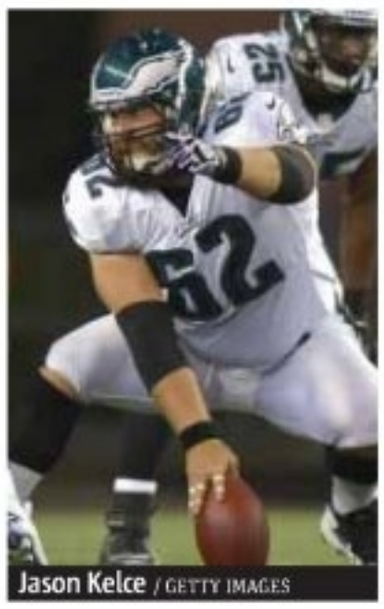
NFL. The Eagles need strong performances from Cooper and Allen, among others.

Here are five players who must be steady this season if the Eagles hope to go anywhere:

1 Riley Cooper, WR
The fourth-year man out of Florida has had an interesting preseason to say the least. Picking fights on and off the field, Cooper has been a beacon for controversy. Still, he is the starter opposite DeSean Jackson due to injury and he's long been a favorite target of Mike Vick from their days together on the scout team. At 6-foot-3, 222 pounds he has the physicality to shine in this offense. It's now or never.

2 Nate Allen, safety
The so-called Donovan McNabb pick is squarely on the chopping block. He won the starting job in camp, kind of. He's listed atop the depth chart in name only, as rookie Earl Wolff will continue to push him for snaps. Allen has all the physical tools — muscular frame, quick feet, big hitter, high football IQ — but he just can't put it all together.

3 Jason Kelce, center
The offensive line got a lot of grief last season and rightfully so as it couldn't stop a pebble of sand.



Jason Kelce / GETTY IMAGES

While no one will argue that Jason Peters is the line's MVP — maybe the team's MVP — Kelce holds everything together.

4 Mike Vick, QB
Sorry to state the obvious, but no NFL team can accomplish anything without a superstar under center. Vick has shown flashes of his 2010 self this preseason — a guy who can elude a pass-rush with his quickness, a guy that throw it on a rope. Unfortunately, he's also dipped back into some old vices, mainly costly interceptions and fumbles.

5 Damaris Johnson, WR
The Eagles ranked 27th last season in average field position at 25.2 yards. It was their lowest score in two decades. They trotted out a litany of return men, all failed. Johnson earned the job with an impressive camp and preseason.

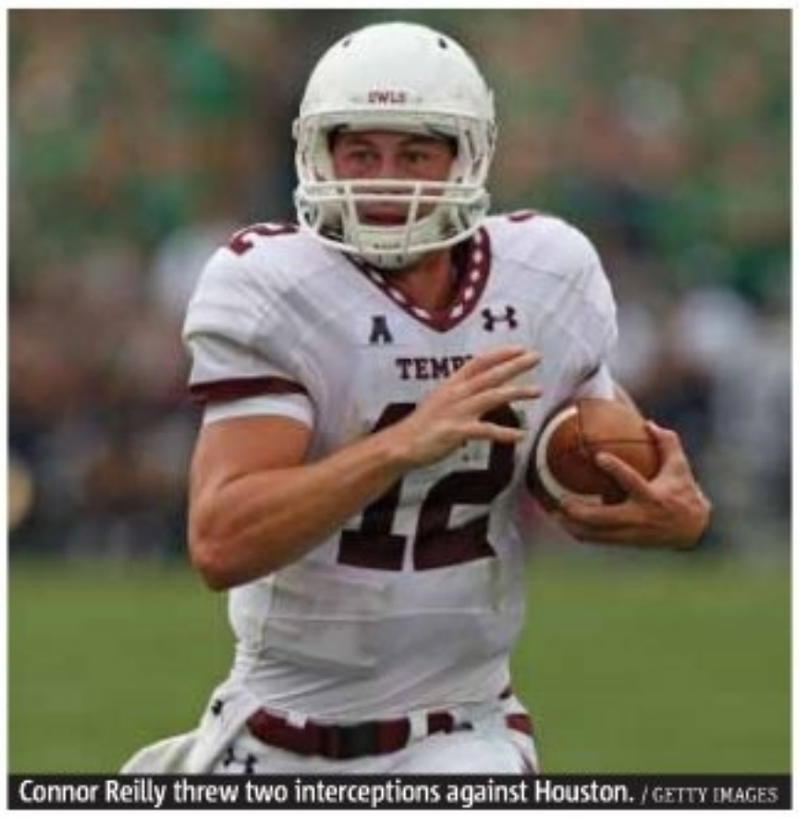
Owls' kicking must improve in a hurry

NCAA. Temple is 0-2 and still struggling to find consistency.



Connor Reilly threw two interceptions against Houston. / GETTY IMAGES

It's often easy to take something for granted, never realizing its true value until it's gone

Take the 0-2 Temple Owls, who deserved a better fate after a heroic performance by their defense — especially in the red zone — than Saturday's 22-13 loss to high-powered Houston in their American Athletic Conference debut at the Linc.

They're already beginning to appreciate just what a potent weapon kicker Brandon McManus was during the Al Golden/Steve Addazio eras.

That's because new coach Matt Rhule has quickly found out how tough it is to win when your guy can't split the uprights, something McManus did regularly (60-for-83, 73 percent) during his four years.

"B-Mac was special," said quarterback Connor Reilly, who didn't help Temple's cause by throwing a pair of interceptions and losing a fumble. "But [freshman] Jim Cooper is our guy now.

"We need to build him up, because he's going to be here four years."

It hasn't started well for Cooper, who missed two field goals and had an extra point blocked last week at Notre Dame, then hooked the PAT in this one after Temple had taken an early 6-3 lead. Rhule next turned to punter Paul Layton, who made the conversion after Kenny Harper's second touchdown pushed it to 13-9 at halftime, only to blow a late third quarter 25-yard chip shot that would've put the Owls on top.

"You're not going to win the game when you miss a field goals, miss an extra point, or turn the football over," said Rhule, whose defense kept Temple in the game by shutting down the Cougars whenever they got a whiff of the goal line. "We need to correct the kicking situation.

"It just changes everything. It is obviously affecting our play calling and what we do."

Simply because it leaves no margin for error for an offense that fears if it doesn't punch it in and get six, it will get nothing.

"It does kind of take all of the air out of the balloon," said Reilly, who was far less effective than in his debut last week. "When you drive all the way down the field and move the ball, but can't get three or seven points.

"A field goal can change the game."

It certainly did for the 2-0 Cougars, who ran off an astounding 96 plays for 524 yards, yet were kept out of the end zone until a late interception led to the clinching score with just 1:06 left. That was the only time in eight red zone trips Houston — which erupted for 62 points in its opener — cashed in.
